The Undergraduate Assembly has already begun the year strong. After a successful retreat in which the UA prepared members for an efficient and productive year, the UA has hit the ground running. The UA’s priorities for the year are to increase accountability and visibility on campus, work on projects that yield tangible results for students, and to expose and promote opportunities for Penn students to engage in the Philadelphia community. This past Sunday, the UA passed a proposal to initiate dialogue between Penn and Allied Barton to promote federal workers’ rights laws awareness among the security guards prevalent on campus.